Friday 15th March 2019, London

Now in its 17th year, envecon brings together environmental economists and interested parties from academia, consultancy and the public and private sector. It is a multidisciplinary, multi-sector conference and provides a unique opportunity to share research methods and results, and practical experience in applying environmental economics in the UK and elsewhere.

- All papers should display academic rigour and show evidence of practical application. We are interested in showcasing papers that have policy relevance and have been used in decision-making by the public and/or private sectors. Papers do not have to be unique applications of new theory; evidence-based policy benefits from repeated applications.
- Abstracts must not exceed 2 sides of A4, in 12 point font, double spaced. They should convey information on the economic theory tested; context of the practical application (actual and/or potential); results and policy implications.
- Please ensure that your abstract indicates which theme(s) your paper falls into and the author for correspondence.
- Selected papers will be presented in parallel sessions. There will also be a dedicated poster session whereby delegates can explore the conference venue and engage with poster presenters.
- Papers and posters for presentation will be selected by the Scientific Committee comprising of academic, public and private experts. The Committee includes Dr Paolo Agnolucci, University College London; Dr Giles Atkinson, London School of Economics; Prof. Ian Bateman, University of East Anglia; Dr Diane Burgess, Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, Northern Ireland; Prof. Mike Christie, University of Aberystwyth; Prof. Simon Dietz, London School of Economics; Prof. Nick Hanley, University of Glasgow; Dr. Yiannis Kountouris, Imperial College London; Prof. Susana Mourato, London School of Economics; Ece Ozdemiroglu, eftec; Prof Dan Rigby, Manchester University; Prof. Kerry Turner, University of East Anglia; and Prof. Ken Willis, University of Newcastle.
